You're worried you're going to miss the train, and there are people before and behind you with the same anxiety, slowing you down and stressing you out. But you'll never suffer again. Instead, take automatic charging of the MetroCard.EasyPay works both for payment per trip and for 30-day unlimited cards. After a one-time setup, your card automatically fills up when your balance is low or the 30-day period ends. (The next 30-day period does not start until you use the card, so if you do can be stocked on weekends without metro.) In a few years, when your card approaches the expiration date, the MTA will mail you a new one. If you keep enough money in your bank account, you can stop worrying about filling out your card forever. Sign up here. The process is boring and inconvenient; this is still an MTA. You must provide two credit or debit cards, a main card and a backup. (You can use your employer's duty-free debit card for transit.) Save your username, PIN, and account number because the system treats your account number as a password. Your card will come in the mail, a brand like EasyPay as shown above, and then simply use it as a normal card. Here's a FAQ. You already know you need a password manager. But you never walk around to buy. . Read moreif you use an unlimited card. I suggest you also receive a travel payment card for each time you travel with a visitor or friend whose card expires. You'll need to create a separate account for each card, which is stupid, but the password manager makes it easier to juggle both accounts. Don't lose your card! If you do, call 1-877-323-7433 immediately, or log in to the website and click on Lost/Damaged MetroCard report in the left column. Otherwise it will turn when someone else finds and uses your card. While waiting for a new card in the mail, you will need to buy a temporary normie card, which, as we have established, is the worst. Please enter your phone number and we will call you soon We will call you Soon Please enter a valid phone number I have problems accessing my account online and the automated phone system because they want a 13-digit number on your account, but there is a 10-digit number and 8 digit number on my card and that's it.
